

“As a mental health clinician who works with college students, I felt that "Silk" was an incredible tool for starting an important campus conversation about gaslighting and emotional abuse. While most students may have heard of the concept of gaslighting, this well-written short film takes them directly into the heart of the matter, powerfully and succinctly addressing and educating the viewer on this challenging subject in an emotionally engaging way. Our campus' screening of the film was followed by a great discussion in which students acknowledged that the film was eye opening, and for some it served as a conduit for sharing their own personal experiences with gaslighting in relationships. Delivering this kind of valuable information to our students via a 1-hour program is exactly the kind of programming that our college campus is always looking for.”
